MESSAGE OVERVIEW

A core belief of Christianity is that the only way to know God is through Jesus. However, statistics show that a growing number of Christians (especially younger ones) don't share their faith. Some even believe it's morally wrong to share their faith. But if we take Jesus seriously, we have no choice but to share the gospel.

DISCUSSION QUESTIONS

Nearly half of Christians between the ages of 20-34 believe it's morally wrong to share their faith, but nearly two thirds of that same demographic believe being a witness for Jesus is an important part of their faith. What is your reaction to these stats?

in a 7 year period, the drug company Mylan raised the price of their Epipen by nearly 500%, making a life-saving drug borderline inaccessible to millions of people. Have we done something similar with the good news? How?

Do we sometimes treat lost things better than lost people? How?

Have you thought about who your "one" might be? Who is it? How can you take a step in your relationship with them to help them know Jesus?

APPLICATION

How do you think you will view the crucifixion differently in the future?
In light of this, how are you going to be different in the future?
